Students reminded of obligation as M’sians

Do not get involved with Bersih 4.0 rally because if you are arrested by the authorities, you will be putting your future at risk.

BY PHILIP WONG, political secretary to the chief minister

Students prepare to set off at the march. Photo by Jeffrey Matuha

During the rally, heads of various departments and 'Seni Satisfy' and 'Dear Gemilang' on the back of the programme.

He added that the young minds ought to steer clear of extremism and the rule of law, which, he said, would lead to racial and religious tension.

"We must take this seriously or our future will be influenced by negative elements thereby jeopardizing the country's stability and peace," Nordin said.

The two-day programme would expose students to entrepreneurial skills including marketing, product packaging and branding.

In Sarawak, he said potential entrepreneurs could develop and explore new markets, becoming the new wave of industrial revolution which was more than enough to meet the needs of small and medium enterprises.

Meanwhile, director of Pusat Rani Kuching, Shamil Shahid, said the Sarawak Entrepreneurship Movement held for the second time this year was aimed at producing young entrepreneurs among students at the institution.

He added the programme was in line with the Tourism and Education Development Plan for the higher education sector which focused on grooming graduating graduates with entrepreneurial skills.

"I hope that two-day programme, attended by entrepreneurship course and workshops beside participating in the safe carnival with food stalls offering a variety of delicious and products," he said.

Said said Pusat Rani Kuching had also set up Student Business Centre (SBC) to enable students to carry out their entrepreneurial activities for a semester, adding that relevant study programmes and workshops would also be held.

He said various activities including a blood donation drive and an exhibition by the National AIDS Drugs Agency would also take place at the campus on Sept 15 to mark Malaysia Day.

"We must take this seriously or our future will be influenced by negative elements thereby jeopardizing the country's stability and peace," Nordin said.

The two-day programme would expose students to entrepreneurial skills including marketing, product packaging and branding.

In Sarawak, he said potential entrepreneurs could develop and explore new markets, becoming the new wave of industrial revolution which was more than enough to meet the needs of small and medium enterprises.

Meanwhile, director of Pusat Rani Kuching, Shamil Shahid, said the Sarawak Entrepreneurship Movement held for the second time this year was aimed at producing young entrepreneurs among students at the institution.

He added the programme was in line with the Tourism and Education Development Plan for the higher education sector which focused on grooming graduating graduates with entrepreneurial skills.

"I hope that two-day programme, attended by entrepreneurship course and workshops beside participating in the safe carnival with food stalls offering a variety of delicious and products," he said.

Said said Pusat Rani Kuching had also set up Student Business Centre (SBC) to enable students to carry out their entrepreneurial activities for a semester, adding that relevant study programmes and workshops would also be held.

He said various activities including a blood donation drive and an exhibition by the National AIDS Drugs Agency would also take place at the campus on Sept 15 to mark Malaysia Day.

A section of the students at the pre-Diwali Day celebrations.

Potential entrepreneurs making the intro and some flags in a photo call.

This group of students offers, among others, lab talk at the Carnival.